Foreword

The General Services Administration, through the National Archives and Records Service, is responsible for administering the permanently valuable noncurrent records of the Federal Government. These archival holdings, now amounting to more than 1 million cubic feet, date from the days of the First Continental Congress and consist of the basic records of the legislative, judicial, and executive branches of our Government. The Presidential libraries of Herbert Hoover, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Harry S. Truman, Dwight D. Eisenhower, John F. Kennedy, and Lyndon B. Johnson contain the papers of those Presidents and of many of their associates in office. These research resources document significant events in our Nation's history, but most of them are preserved because of their continuing practical use in the ordinary processes of government, for the protection of private rights, and for the research use of scholars and students.

To facilitate the use of these materials our archivists prepare various kinds of finding aids that describe their nature and content. The present work is one such publication. We believe that it will be of value to anyone who wishes to use the records it describes.

Preface

The first step in the records description program of the National Archives and Records Service is the compilation of preliminary inventories of material in the more than 400 record groups to which the holdings of the Office of the National Archives are allocated. These inventories are called "preliminary" because they are provisional in character. Compiled primarily for internal use, they are intended both as finding aids to help the staff render more efficient reference service and as a means of establishing administrative control over the records.

Each preliminary inventory contains an introduction that briefly states the history and functions of the agency that created and accumulated the records. The records themselves are described series by series; that is, by groups of file units of the same type or form, or that deal with the same subject or activity, or that are arranged serially. These series, in turn, are generally listed under subgroup headings that indicate their immediate office of origin within an agency, or, on occasion, the functions to which they relate. Other significant information about the records may sometimes be given in appendixes.

Another series of finding aids, inventories, have essentially the same content as preliminary inventories but are issued only after the records have been analyzed to ensure their completeness, to eliminate disposable materials, and to perfect the arrangement and description of those retained.

In addition to inventories and other finding aids that relate to particular record groups, the National Archives issues publications that give an overall picture of materials in its custody. A new, comprehensive Guide to the National Archives of the United States will be issued. A guide devoted to one geographical area—Guide to Materials on Latin America in the National Archives (1961)—has been published. Reference information papers analyze records in the National Archives on such subjects as transportation, small business, and the Middle East. Records of the Civil War have been described in Guide to Federal Archives Relating to the Civil War (1962), Guide to the Archives of the Government of the Confederate States of America (1968), and Civil War Maps in the National Archives (1964); those of World War I in Handbook of Federal World War Agencies and Their Records, 1917-1921 (1943); and those of World War II in the two-volume guide, Federal Records of World War II (1950-51). Records of genealogical interest and value have been listed in Guide to Genealogical Records in the National Archives (1964), and a major segment of our motion picture holdings is described in the Guide to the Ford Film Collection in the National Archives (1970). The extensive body of maps and charts is described in the Guide to Cartographic Records in the National Archives (1971).

Many bodies of records of high research value have been published on microfilm by the National Archives. These microfilm publications are described in the current List of National Archives Microfilm Publications and are available for purchase. For other publications, see the most recent Select List of Publications of the National Archives and Records Service, General Information Leaflet No. 3.

Introduction

I. BACKGROUND INFORMATION

HISTORY OF THE COMMAND STRUCTURE

GEOGRAPHICAL ORGANIZATION

In 1821 the Army of the United States consisted of seven regiments of infantry and a corps of artillery composed of four regiments posted throughout the United States. One hundred years later the size of the Army had increased tremendously with a consequent increase in the number of posts, camps, and other field installations where the various components were stationed. In 1920 the U.S. Army was stationed not only in the continental United States but also in its overseas possessions.

For purposes of administrative control of the field army, a territorial (or geographical) command structure was established whereby the United States, and later its overseas possessions, was divided into Army commands designated as territorial divisions and departments. The number of departments or divisions and the areas they embraced varied according to the circumstances of the frontiers of the United States. The Army commands were established by the President, and the assignment of commanders and distribution of troops were determined by the War Department.

Before 1813 the United States had upon occasion been divided into Army commands, but during that year the organization of the Army of the United States and its field installations on a geographical command basis became a permanent concept. By a War Department general order of March 19, 1813, the United States was divided into nine military districts, increased to 10 on July 2, 1814. On May 17, 1815, this organization was changed and the United States was divided into a Division of the North and a Division of the South, with five military departments under each division. Again by a War Department general order of May 17, 1821, the United States was divided into two geographical commands: an Eastern Department and a Western Department.

The division of the U.S. Army field commands into the Eastern Department and the Western Department lasted until May 1837 when the United States was again divided into two divisions—Eastern and Western—with numbered military departments under each division. Except for the period from July 1842 to April 1844, when the division organization was removed as a superior command over the military departments, the partition of the United States instituted in 1837 remained until 1848. During this period there were, however, frequent changes in the number of departments and in the areas encompassed by these departments. In October 1848 a Pacific Division was added to the two existing divisions. Rearrangement of the number of departments and the areas under each continued until October 1853 when the division organization was completely removed, the number of military departments was reduced to five, and the designations were by name rather than number.

After October 1853 there were frequent changes of names and areas of jurisdiction, and the number of departments increased and decreased as the military requirements of the United States varied. The largest number of changes occurred during the Civil War and immediately thereafter. Except for the short period between July 25 and August 17, 1861, when three military departments reported to the Division of the Potomac, the division as an intermediate command between the departments and the War Department was not reinstituted until October 1863. Although a Division of the Mississippi was established in October 1863 and several additional divisions were established thereafter, at no time until March 1869 did all departments report to a superior division headquarters. But between June 1865 and August 1866 all departments except the Department of Washington reported to a superior division. During the brief existence of the Division of the Southwest from May 17 to June 27, 1865, established under General Sheridan for the special purpose of restoring Texas and part of Louisiana to the Union, no military department was subordinate to it.

Military government was instituted during the Civil War in occupied areas of the South where required. In May and June 1865 President Johnson appointed provisional governors for the Southern States. By an act of March 2, 1867 (14 Stat. 428), Congress divided the 10 Southern States into five military (reconstruction) districts, each to be commanded by an Army officer with both civil and military powers. The establishment of these five reconstruction districts had the effect of abolishing four existing military departments (Potomac, South, Arkansas, and Gulf) and replacing them with four military districts (1, 2, 4, and 5, respectively). The 3d Military District was a completely new command. The military districts had the same level of responsibility as the former military departments. For a brief period the 1st and 4th Military Districts were placed under military divisions, and in March 1870 the last military district, the 5th, was abolished.

After March 1870 the pattern of command structure was more consistent. Between 1870 and 1920 there were three periods when the military division was established as a superior command over the military departments: March 1870 to July 1891, December 1903 to April 1907, and May 1911 to February 1913. During the intervening periods all military departments, with three exceptions, operated directly under the War Department. The three exceptions were: (1) the Departments of the Gulf and South, which operated from January to November 1872 independently of division supervision, (2) the Department of West Point, an independent command, and (3) the overseas military departments, under divisions between December 1898 and February 1913 (whose records are not a part of the record group described in this inventory).

On August 20, 1920, under War Department General Order 50, the six existing geographical (often referred to as territorial) departments in the continental United States were abolished, and in their place nine corps areas were established. Except for Puerto Rico, which was placed in the Second Corps area, lands outside the continental United States remained under the previously established overseas departments.

During the War of 1812, the war that brought about the geographical command concept, there was no Commanding General of the Army. This function was carried out by the Secretary of War; thus the commanders of the military departments reported directly to him. In 1821 Secretary of War Calhoun, feeling the need of a single commanding general for the Army, appointed Gen. Jacob Brown as commanding general, and the commanders of the Eastern and Western Departments reported to General Brown.

The question of who really commanded the Army—the Secretary of War or the Commanding General of the Army—was not settled in 1821. The first successful attempt to resolve the problem came in 1903 when the Office of the Chief of Staff replaced the Headquarters of the Army. The commanding general's constitutional position was uncertain, and no statutory authority defined his role either in 1821 or during the long history of his office. This uncertainty of authority affected not only the relationship between the commanding general and the line commanders in the geographical commands but also the relationship between line commanders and officers of the staff departments in the field. It also affected the relationship between the Secretary of War and the commanding general and their respective relationships to the staff department chiefs.

Army regulations throughout the years placed the military establishment under the orders of the Commanding General of the Army in matters that pertained to its discipline and military control, but its fiscal affairs were conducted by the Secretary of War through the several staff departments. Thus it was more or less accepted that the command exercised by the Commanding General of the Army was composed of the aggregate o the several territorial commands established by the President. Yet the commanding general's control of the territorial departments was limited since the distribution and diversion of the staff department support could clearly influence the operations of the territorial commands.

In actuality, control of the territorial commanders depended upon the relative weaknesses and personalities of the various Secretaries of War and commanding generals. President Polk directed military operations during the Mexican War due only in part to the fact that Gen. Winfield Scott abandoned the office of commanding general to lead a field army. Twice General Scott fled to New York leaving the War Department completely in the hands of the Secretary of War. At the beginning of the Civil War, Secretary of War Cameron and General Scott attempted to follow a division of labor suggested by Army regulations—Cameron concentrating upon organization and administration of the new armies and Scott determining strategy. When General McClellan replaced General Scott as commanding general in the fall of 1861, McClellan set about to run the War Department. McClellan was relieved as commanding general in March 1862 with the expectation that he would assume responsibility for military control, but he was content to serve as a translator of the President's plans into military terms and transmit them to field commanders. Thus control of the Army remained with Lincoln and Stanton until General Grant was appointed commanding general in the spring of 1864.

In 1867, during the Reconstruction period, Congress passed several acts that made the military forces in the South—five military districts—virtually a separate Army under Congressional control, as distinguished from the frontier border forces that remained under the Secretary of War. At the beginning of Grant's presidency, Grant approved War Department General Order 11 of March 5, 1869, over the signature of General Schofield, Secretary of War, appointing General Sherman Commanding General of the Army and placing the chiefs of staff corps, departments, and bureaus under his immediate orders. This order placed the General between the War Department bureaus and the Secretary of War. By March 27, 1869, Grant's new Secretary of War, John A. Rawlins, convinced Grant that statutes required the Secretary's direct control over the bureaus, and General Order 11 was rescinded except for the part that placed General Sherman in command of the Army. Henceforth, all orders and instructions relating to military operations issued by the President or Secretary of War were to be issued through the Commanding General of the Army.

When Secretary of War Belknap began interfering with Sherman's control of the Army, Sherman departed for St. Louis in 1874, leaving, as General Scott had done, control of the Army to the Secretary of War. In 1876, Secretary of War Taft, eager for Sherman to return and assume the duties of commanding general, explicitly reserved to Sherman the military control and discipline of the Army under the President even to the extent of placing two staff departments, the Adjutant General's Office and the Inspector General's Department, under the Commanding General of the Army. In 1882 Commanding General Sheridan attempted to gain control over all staff departments as well as the field commands but was rebuffed. On the other hand, General Schofield, having had experience as Secretary of War, upon becoming commanding general in 1888, considered himself a chief of staff and resigned the command of the Army, both line and staff, to the Secretaries of War whom he served.

In 1903 the problem was theoretically resolved by the establishment of the Office of Chief of Staff wherein the Chief of Staff was to act as a military adviser to the Secretary of War. The Chief of Staff was to issue, through the Adjutant General of the Army, all orders and instructions of the Secretary of War, and he was to supervise, under the direction of the Secretary of War, all staff departments and corps, all troops of the line and staff, and all other matters pertaining to the military establishment of the Regular Army. Since this new position impinged upon the authority of War Department bureaus that had long existed as virtually independent bureaus, the problem of control was more nearly settled when, during the Taft administration, Henry L. Stimson became Secretary of War and was willing to cooperate fully with the Chief of Staff.

Tactical Organization

As previously noted, the territorial organization was initially established for administrative control of the Army. During peacetime the largest permanent tactical unit in the Regular Army between 1821 and World War I was the regiment (the records of these regiments are with the Records of United States Regular Army Mobile Units, 1821-1942, Record Group 391). Usually U.S. troops, composed of detachments or companies, operating under the territorial commanders, were sufficient to disperse Indians, escort survey groups, maintain peace during strikes, and the like. In the 1830's, however, an Army of the South was necessary in Florida to control the Indians, and in the 1850's the Mormons occasioned the presence of an Army of Utah. In these two cases and in similar ones, once the territory had been "conquered," posts were established, troops settled in to maintain U.S. authority, and departmental commands were established. Thus the Army of the South became the Army of Florida and then the 9th Military Department, and the Army of Utah became the Department of Utah. Usually there was little necessity, within the continental command structure, between 1821 and 1920 to establish tactical units above the regimental level of the Regular Army.

The major exception, of course, was the period of the Civil War when at least 21 Union armies were established at one time or another. Not all territorial departments during the war had whole armies attached to them, but usually a field army was attached, for administrative direction, to a territorial department. The only known exception was the Army of Virginia under General Pope, which existed for 3 months in 1862 apparently directly under the War Department. Although General McClellan appeared to command only an army, he had been designated by the War Department to command the Division of the Potomac; he proceeded on his own authority to redesignate the Division as the Army of the Potomac. Generally the mobile forces of a major department were designated an army, and the commander of the department was also commander of the army; the same headquarters staff was used for both the department and the army, and the organization assumed such titles as the Department and Army of the Cumberland, the Department and Army of the Tennessee, or the Department and Army of Virginia. Four army corps were identical with geographical departments: (1) the Department of Virginia and the 7th Army Corps, July 1862 to July 1863; the Department of Arkansas and the 7th Army Corps, January 1864 to August 1865; (2) the Middle Department and the 8th Army Corps, August 1862 to July 1865; (3) the Department of North Carolina and the 18th Army Corps, December 1862 to July 1863, and the Department of Virginia and North Carolina and the 18th Army Corps, July 1863 to May 1864; and (4) the Department of Washington and the 22d Army Corps. There never was a Department and Army of Washington or a Department and Army of Arkansas. (For 2 months, October to December 1862, there was no distinction between the Department of the Cumberland and the 14th Army Corps.)

After November 1862, army corps provided the principal mobile forces for the various armies, which were stabilized to the same 25 army corps. In 1863 the Department and Army of the Cumberland was composed of the 14th, 20th, and 21st Army Corps. Each army corps within an army had its own commander and staff officers. In addition to the army corps, a department and army command might have numerous mobile forces, not a part of an army corps, such as U.S. Forces, separate brigades, U.S. Colored Troops, U.S. Defenses, and even separate divisions.

Not always did the name of the army correspond with the name of the department. For example, the army under the Department of the Ohio from August to October 1862 was the Army of Kentucky; there was no Department and Army of Missouri, but the Department of Missouri had under its command at one time or another the Army of the Border, the Army of the Frontier, the Army of Southeast Missouri, and the Army of Southwest Missouri; and, before the establishment of the Department of Arkansas and the 7th Army Corps, there was an Army of Arkansas under the Department of Tennessee. When an army and department did not have the same name, each had a separate commander and staff. This situation came about as a result of frequent changes in boundaries and designations, particularly in the early years of the war.

This combination of positions between a geographical and tactical command also appeared on the next geographical and tactical level. Many geographical districts were identical with tactical divisions of an army corps.

For example, the District of Memphis in the Department and Army of the Tennessee was identical with the 5th Division of the 16th Army Corps in 1863. This command had the same commanding general and staff. A more unusual combination was that held by General Grant between February and October 1862 when he was commander of the District of West Tennessee and commander of the Army of West Tennessee; the latter was composed of four divisions that were also geographical districts (Jackson, Memphis, Corinth, and Mississippi). Frequently a post was also organized as a separate tactical brigade.

Before 1895 Army regulations had stated that in time of peace no army corps, divisions, or brigades were to be formed. In 1895 Army regulations permitted the formation of these tactical units for purposes of instruction. In January 1903 the Militia Act was passed that provided for an organized militia, composed of National Guard companies, that was to be issued arms and equipment by the Army, was to be instructed by Regular Army officers, and was to be included in joint maneuvers with the Regular Army. Consequently, Army regulations authorized peacetime brigades and divisions composed of both Regular Army and militia to be organized for instructional purposes, and many temporary tactical units were formed by department commanders for training purposes.

In 1913 all troops of the mobile Army within the continental limits of the United States were organized tactically into three divisions, pursuant to War Department General Order 9 of February 6, 1913. The First Division was commanded by the commander of the Eastern Department with headquarters at Governors Island. Likewise, the commander of the Central Department commanded the Second Division with headquarters at Chicago and the commander of the Western Department commanded the Third Division with headquarters at San Francisco. The division and department commander used the same Chief of Staff and Assistant Chief of Staff for both the division and the department. A cavalry division was included in the Southern Department and the First Hawaiian Brigade in the Hawaiian Department.

FUNCTIONS AND DUTIES

Geographical Commands

The first detailed description in Army regulations of functions of territorial division and department commanders appeared in 1881 as a summary of functions outlined in general orders and other issuances of the War Department between 1863 and 1879. In 1881 a department could have been independent or under a division; the regulations treated the commanders of both alike. They were authorized to exercise supervision and command over all the military forces of the United States within their territorial limits, whether line or staff, with the exception of the Military Academy, the Artillery School, the Engineer establishment at Willet's Point, the general depots of recruits and supply, the arsenals, permanent fortifications in the process of construction or repair, and officers employed in nonmilitary duties. Additional installations exempted by Army regulations in 1895 were the Infantry and Cavalry School at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., and the Cavalry and Light Artillery School at Fort Riley, Kans., in matters pertaining to instruction.

From 1903 to 1907 and from 1911 to 1913 the territorial division was the command immediately under the War Department, and all department commanders were responsible to a division. During these periods the division commander commanded all the military forces within his division, whether line or staff, except for the special exemptions. He originated, directed, and approved military operations within his several departments and in emergencies transferred troops from one department to another. He supervised the inspection of troops, designated target practice periods, and superintended the post schools for officers. He also submitted annual plans to the Chief of Staff for the mobilization and concentration of the forces of his command—regular, volunteer, and militia—with reference to some definitely stated objective.

During these two periods the subordinate department commander was primarily charged with the discipline, shelter, supply, and instruction of his troops; with the sanitation of posts and camps; and with the inspection of the troops under his command at least once a year.

Between 1907 and 1911 and from 1913 on, department commanders reported directly to the War Department and in this elevated capacity assumed most of the duties performed by the former division commanders. The major exceptions were coordinating operations and transferring troops between departments.

Staff Officers

In order to carry out their functions and duties, division and department commanders were authorized staff officers, varying in number and type with the responsibilities of the commanders. Before the Civil War, a territorial commander required few staff officers—an adjutant, a quartermaster, and perhaps an ordnance officer. During the Civil War many departments, particularly those that were also armies, required a full complement. A department staff might include an officer from each of the ten staff departments in Washington: an adjutant, a commissary, an engineer, an inspector, a judge advocate, an ordnance officer, a paymaster, a quartermaster, a signal officer, and a surgeon. There were other staff officers not associated with the War Department bureaus: usually a commissary of musters and a provost marshal on the department staff during wartime, and perhaps a chief and/or inspector of artillery and a similar officer for cavalry. In addition there were the personal aides of the commander, and a staff officer might have one or more assistants. Each army corps was initially authorized an adjutant, an inspector, a commissary, and a quartermaster; later in the war a commissary of musters was also authorized.

At the end of the war, by War Department General Order 141 of October 7, 1865, the staff of a department commander was reduced to an adjutant, an inspector, a quartermaster, a commissary, a medical director, a judge advocate, and two aides-de-camp. The first authorization for staff officers to be found in the Army regulations was that of 1881, which limited both division and department commanders to the usual aides-de-camp, one assistant adjutant, one or more inspectors, one judge advocate, one quartermaster, one commissary, one medical director, and one paymaster. An engineer and an ordnance officer were allowed only if needed. These officers, although members of the General Staff departments that they represented, were responsible to the department or division commander to whom they were assigned. This dual allegiance between the General Staff department and the commanding officer of a department proved less difficult after clear lines of responsibility were established within the War Department in 1903.

When the division organization was reestablished in 1903, the division commander's staff was authorized to consist of personal aides, one officer of the General Staff Corps as chief of staff, an officer from the Adjutant General's Office, as many inspectors as necessary from the Inspector General's Department, and an officer from the Corps of Engineers. The department commander, no longer in need of his inspectors, was reduced to the six remaining staff officers as permitted in the 1881 Army regulations. When the division echelon was abolished in 1907 and the responsibilities of the department commander were thus increased, he was reauthorized an inspector, an officer from the General Staff Corps, and, if coast artillery troops were in the department, an officer of coast artillery to advise with respect to the efficiency of coast artillery material, drill, instruction, and troop employment.

In 1911, when the department commanders lost most of their functions to the newly instated division commanders they also lost all their staff officers with the exception of personal aides and one adjutant general. Meanwhile the division commanders were assigned, in addition to those staff officers authorized in the 1903 organization, a judge advocate, a quartermaster, a commissary, a medical officer, and a paymaster (all formerly on the department staff) besides an ordnance officer, a signal officer, and a coast artillery officer if the division embraced coast defenses. This change in staff from the department to the division level in 1911 was necessary because the division commander controlled all matters of supply and administration within his command, whereas in 1903 the position had been one of policymaking and coordination.

In the reorganization of 1913, the department commanders were assigned the divisions' staff officers and in addition an officer to take charge of militia affairs. Since the department commander now performed both administrative and tactical duties, his staff was to be organized into two sections: (1) a territorial department staff consisting of those officers whose functions pertained to the department as a territorial command, and (2) the division staff consisting of those officers whose functions pertained to the division as a tactical unit and who accompanied the division wherever it went.

Staff Officers from General Staff Departments

Although responsible to the department or division commanders to whom they were assigned, staff officers assigned from the corps of the various General Staff departments were charged with the proper administration of affairs, in the division or department to which assigned, relating to their particular General Staff department. For most of the period covered by this preliminary inventory there were 10 War Department bureaus; these 10 bureaus were collectively referred to as the General Staff departments. The heads of these General Staff departments functioned as heads of War Department bureaus and not as members of a general staff.

These staff officers served in a dual capacity; they were under the administrative supervision of the commanders of the department or division and under the technical supervision of the General Staff department. Unless correspondence involved questions of administrative responsibility within the supervision of the commanding officer of the territorial department or required the action of department commanders, the staff officers were permitted, by Army regulations, to correspond directly with their respective War Department bureaus on all business concerned exclusively with their bureau. These technical matters pertained not only to the operation of their respective services but also to the disposition of surplus and reserve commodities, supplies, and equipment. Direct correspondence was also authorized between department staff officers and the staff representatives of subordinate commanders. This authorization was not intended to violate the rights and prerogatives of the department commander or to curtail his authority over his subordinates.

Seven of the 10 bureaus prepared and published, under the authority of the Secretary of War, manuals containing the regulations governing their operations. These were distributed to the officers of the bureaus for their use. For these seven bureaus, therefore, Army regulations consisted only of those that were general in nature or affected other branches of the service. On the other hand, Army regulations were quite specific regarding the functions of inspectors and judge advocates, for the functions of these bureaus affected many branches of the service and applied to all members of the U.S. military service.

Adjutant General. Every division or department was assigned an adjutant general and one or more assistant adjutant generals whose primary function was that of keeping records for the command. More specifically, the adjutant and his assistants opened all mail for the commanding general; disposed of and distributed all papers received; answered letters; signed endorsements; supervised the clerks, orderlies, and guards; distributed and filed general orders; drafted and signed special orders; handled all personnel records (returns, lists of troops, disability discharges, furloughs, resignations, leaves, and discharges to accept commissions); and periodically examined record books maintained by the command.

Commissary of Subsistence. The staff of a department commander included a chief commissary who was charged, under the department commander, with proper administration of subsistence affairs in the department. The chief commissary had charge of the depot of his department that was located at the same place as department headquarters. In administering subsistence affairs within the department he consolidated reports from post commissaries before transmitting them to the Commissary General of Subsistence, revised requisitions for commissary stores, and recommended transfer of subsistence funds and subsistence supplies between post commissaries as seemed desirable; he directed the purchasing commissaries designated by the Commissary General in the shipping of stores, with respect to kind, amount, and dates, to the stations in the department; he studied the markets from which subsistence stores were supplied to the posts and made recommendations to the Commissary General of any desired changes in the points of supply for the posts; he furnished funds and supplies to posts within his department that were exempted from the supervision of the department commander; and he maintained a commissary book for each post of the department and approved or disapproved requests for subsistence stores.

Engineer Officer. The duties of the Corps of Engineers consisted of reconnoitering and surveying for military purposes, selecting sites and planning and estimating for defensive or offensive works of troops in the field, supervising the location of all buildings within 1 mile of any fortification, installing electric powerplants and electric power cables connected with seacoast batteries, constructing and repairing military roads, railroads, and bridges, and similar related duties.

Officers of the Corps of Engineers and their employees and contractors, while engaged in construction and repair work at military posts, were under the exclusive control of the Chief of Engineers in all matters pertaining to such work and not under the department commander. The chief function of the engineer officer of the territorial department appeared to be that of adviser to the department commander in matters relating to functions of the Corps of Engineers and the performance of liaison duties between the department commander and the Chief of Engineers.

Inspector. The inspecting officers assigned to divisions or departments performed their duties under the immediate direction of their commanding generals. Unless otherwise directed by the Secretary of War or the commanding general of the Army, annual inspections were to be made by division or department inspectors of every department, post, station, and command within the jurisdiction of the department or division command. The sphere of inquiry of the Inspector General's Department included virtually every aspect of military affairs except as specifically limited by Army regulations or War Department orders.

Judge Advocate. Under Army regulations the original proceedings of all general courts-martial, courts of inquiry, and military commissions with the decisions and orders of the reviewing authorities made thereon were to be forwarded to the Judge Advocate General. It was the responsibility of the judge advocate of the territorial department to see that this was accomplished. Proceedings of garrison and regimental courts-martial were filed by the department judge advocate and, through the department commander, he corresponded with the Judge Advocate General in matters pertaining to the proceedings of the courts-martial, courts of inquiry, and military commissions. The department judge advocate was required to forward to the Judge Advocate General an annual report in which he summarized the number and character of cases tried by courts-martial in the department during the year and in which he submitted recommendations and remarks relating to the administration of military justice in his department.

Ordnance Officer. The Chief of Ordnance was charged with the duty of procuring, by purchase or manufacture, and distributing the necessary ordnance and ordnance stores for the Army and the organized militia and of establishing and maintaining arsenals and depots for their manufacture and safekeeping. The ordnance officer in the department, like the chief commissary, was charged under the department commander with the proper administration of ordnance affairs in the department. He consolidated reports from subordinate ordnance officers and transmitted them to the Chief of Ordnance, approved requisitions for ordnance stores not on hand in the department, supervised the accounting for all ordnance and ordnance stores on hand in the department, and reported annually to the Chief of Ordnance upon conditions in his department, including recommendations for the improvement of ordnance affairs.

Paymaster. The Pay Department had charge, until 1912, of the supply and distribution of and accounting for funds for the payment of the Army and other financial duties specifically assigned to it. The chief paymaster of a command, under the direction of the commander, had control of all paymasters therein and was responsible for the payment of the troops of the command.

Quartermaster. The department quartermaster was charged, under the department commander, with the proper administration of affairs relating to the Quartermaster Corps in the department. He was responsible for the depot and for purchases for his department at the place where department headquarters was located. He received estimates for funds and necessary quartermaster supplies from subordinate quartermasters and consolidated these and similar reports for transmittal to the Quartermaster Department; he contracted for fuel and forage, and, after 1912, for fresh meat and vegetables, ice, and other subsistence stores; he contracted for nonpersonal services, such as telephones, water, gas, electric current, shoeing animals, rentals, furnishing towels, laundering, wagon transportation, and disposal of garbage and waste; after 1912, as superintendent of the payment of armies in the field, he arranged for the pay of troops; he kept informed about contemplated troop movements in order to prevent the necessity of making purchases without at least 10 days of advertising; he recommended to the department commander the desirability of transferring overstocked items to other posts and kept the department commander informed as to the character and capacity of storehouses at posts; and he reported annually to the department commander on the operations under his supervision.

Signal Officer. The Chief Signal Officer had charge, under the Secretary of War, of all military signal duties. For the most part these concerned the construction, repair, and operation of telegraph and telephone lines; the supervision of instruction in military signaling, telephony, and telegraphy prescribed by the War Department; and the procurement, preservation, and distribution of the necessary supplies for the Signal Corps and the signal equipment required in coast defenses.

Surgeon. The Medical Department was charged with the duty of investigating the sanitary condition of the Army and making recommendations in reference thereto and of advising with reference to the location of permanent camps and posts the adoption of water supply purification and waste disposal systems. It was also responsible for caring for the sick and wounded, making physical examinations of officers and enlisted men, administering military hospitals, recruiting, instructing, and controlling the Hospital Corps and the Army Nurse Corps (female), and furnishing all medical and hospital supplies except those for animals.

The surgeon, under the direction of the commanding officer, supervised the hygiene of the command and recommended measures to prevent or diminish disease. He saw that the proper and required records of subordinate Medical Department officers were maintained and made investigations as necessary for the purpose of making recommendations to the commanding officer about necessary training, instruction, and use of Medical Department personnel of the command. He also initiated and supervised measures for the care and treatment of the sick and wounded.

Other Staff Officers

During the Civil War additional Staff officers, not directly represented in the General Staff departments, were assigned to division and department commanders.

Chief and/or Inspector of Artillery. There was no chief of artillery on the bureau level, but in August 1862 Gen. W. F. Barry was assigned to the Chief of Ordnance as Inspector of Artillery. (He was also Chief of Artillery for the Defenses of Washington under Gen. Nathaniel P. Banks in September 1862.) In 1862, by War Department General Order 91, the senior artillery officer in each army corps was to act as Chief of Ordnance and Artillery, but at the department and army level there was both a Chief of Artillery and an Ordnance Officer. The Chief of Artillery was responsible to the department commander for the state of artillery supplies and any matters relating to artillery within the department. Any artillery troops not attached to other troops were commanded by the Chief of Artillery. He supervised and inspected personnel and materiel of artillery and issued orders necessary to ensure the instruction of personnel and the availability of materiel. He reported periodically to the department commander upon the condition of the batteries and suggested necessary changes or improvements in equipment and ammunition. The Chief of Artillery could have several artillery inspectors under his supervision to aid in carrying out his duties; frequently, however, the chief and inspector were the same officer. Toward the end of the war the Chief of Artillery was frequently deleted from the roster of staff officers and his duties taken over by the Inspector of Artillery.

Chief and/or Inspector of Cavalry. There was no Chief of Cavalry on the bureau level in Washington, but there was a Cavalry Bureau, which was primarily concerned with supplying mounts. Before its establishment in 1863, periodic inspections had been required by the Adjutant General's Office of the commanders of the army corps, divisions, and brigades, which would report the names of officers whose cavalry horses appeared to have been neglected or to be unfit for duty. It was the intent of these inspections to dismiss from the service those officers who did not take proper care of their horses. After the Cavalry Bureau was established, monthly inspections of all cavalry troops were required, and the reports of these inspections were to be forwarded through the army or department commander to the Cavalry Bureau. These reports were to include information on the condition of the cavalry service in general and particularly on the condition of the mounts. The reports were further to state the service the inspected troops had done since the last inspection, how many miles their horses had traveled within the month, what character of service had been required of them and under what circumstances it had been rendered, the quantity and quality of the forage issued, and any other information that the Cavalry Bureau should have. The department's Chief of Cavalry was responsible for these monthly inspections as well as the organization and equipment of the cavalry in his department. Sometimes the Chief of Cavalry had additional inspectors to aid in the inspection duties. Sometimes the Chief and Inspector of Cavalry were the same officer, or an Inspector of Cavalry might carry out the inspection duties alone.

Commissaries of Musters. According to War Department General Order 48 of February 25, 1863, there was to be detailed by the commander of every army corps and department an officer as a commissary of musters, who was to have two enlisted men as clerks in his office. There was also to be one assistant commissary of musters for each division. Only officers of the Regular Army could be detailed to muster into and out of the service of the United States, and no officer could make the musters unless some competent authority had detailed that officer to the duty.

Each assistant commissary of musters in the division was responsible for making all musters into and out of the service of the United States for his division, for supplying any information on the subject of musters and muster rolls to the members of his division when requested, and for preparing a daily report to the commissary of musters of his corps or department of all musters made by him since his last report.

A commissary of musters was responsible to the Adjutant General's Office for the correctness of the musters and muster rolls within his corps or department. He supervised the musters to the extent necessary to ensure prompt and efficient performance of this service in his command. He was responsible for assigning every regiment and independent company within his command to one of the assistant commissaries of musters. He also mustered military personnel in and out of the service, and he corrected and consolidated the rolls and reports of his assistant commissaries for transmission to the Adjutant General's Office.

Commissioner for the Exchange of Prisoners of War (Agent for Exchange). On July 12, 1862, the President authorized Maj. Gen. John A. Dix to negotiate a general exchange of prisoners with the Confederate States. The ensuing cartel was announced by War Department General Order 142 of September 25, 1862. Maj. Gen. Ethan A. Hitchcock was detailed as Commissioner for the Exchange of Prisoners in 1862, and Maj. Gen. Benjamin F. Butler was designated by Secretary Stanton in 1864 to negotiate for and effect prisoner exchanges. Stanton also authorized other commanders to open communications with the enemy and to effect exchanges when they could.

One department commander so authorized was Gen. Nathaniel P. Banks, who on May 24, 1864, by Department of the Gulf Order 135, ordered Col. Charles C. Dwight to report to department headquarters in New Orleans "for duty as commissioner for the exchange of prisoners of war." In June Colonel Dwight was ordered by the commander of the Military Division of West Mississippi to continue in the same capacity as a commissioner for exchange in the division. According to general orders issued by the Department of the Gulf, several hundred soldiers were exchanged as a result of cartels entered into by Colonel Dwight. In March 1865 he was replaced by Col. William Sterling who continued the same duties for the Division of West Mississippi.

Provost Marshal General and Provost Marshal. In 1863 a Provost Marshal General's Bureau was established in the War Department and charged with enrolling forces for the draft and with apprehending draft deserters. The bureau bore little resemblance to the provost marshal departments in the territorial departments. The Wa Department bureau operated through State mustering and dispersing officers and State provost marshals and boards of enrollment. The State organizations existed initially in the loyal Northern States, but as Southern territory reverted to Federal jurisdiction the draft laws were extended to these areas, and the jurisdiction of the Provost Marshal General's Bureau was extended to Arkansas, Tennessee, Kentucky, and Missouri.

The functions of the territorial department staff offices of provost marshal general and provost marshal were generally unrelated to those of the Provost Marshal General in Washington. The provost marshal system adopted by the territorial departments satisfied two needs: the military policing of soldiers and the military control over civilians in occupied areas of the South. Some departments obviously had no need for exercising military control over civilians in once rebellious areas, but even where the need existed the organization of the provost marshal departments varied. The Department of Mississippi had a provost marshal department composed of one provost marshal general, a provost marshal for each post, and one for each division in the field; the Department of Kansas had a provost marshal department composed of one provost marshal general, one assistant provost marshal general in each military district, and several assistant provost marshals in towns.

The first provost marshal was Col. Andrew Porter, appointed by the Division of the Potomac to restore order and discipline in the city of Washington. He organized a provost guard and proceeded to restore order and discipline by instituting a curfew, exercising surveillance over civilians for disloyalty, controlling military prisons and political prisoners, and controlling the liquor traffic in army camps. In 1862 Porter was appointed Provost Marshal General in charge of a Provost Marshal Department of the Army of the Potomac, with jurisdiction over a provost marshal and provost guard in each army corps and division.

The Provost Marshal General's duties were similar to those of provost marshal generals in other departments and entailed the suppression of gambling houses, barrooms, brothels, and of all disturbances beyond the limits of the camps; the prevention of straggling on the march; searches, seizures, and arrests; the control of deserters from the enemy and prisoners of war taken from the enemy; the countersigning of safeguards; issuing passes to citizens within the lines and for purposes of trade; and resolving complaints of citizens about the conduct of soldiers. When General Hooker commanded the Army of the Potomac, the Provost Marshal General also directed a Bureau of Military Information concerned with procuring, processing, and disseminating information.

As the Union armies advanced, the civil government in the South fell, and the Army became the sole source of law and order in the occupied areas. Faced with the necessity of providing some form of government, the military departments extended the functions of the provost marshals from policing the Army to policing and governing the occupied areas. In most occupied areas the provost marshals became both policemen and judges, for it was they who developed a system of loyalty oaths as a means of testing inclinations of Southern citizens. The provost marshals maintained registers of the names of all persons who availed themselves of the privilege of taking the oath of allegiance; those who did not were sent beyond the lines, expelled from their homes, and in some areas arrested and jailed. The provost marshals issued travel passes and trade permits and determined eligibility for Government food and supplies upon the basis of the loyalty oaths. They collected monies ordinarily collected by municipal authorities, such as fines for disorderly conduct, for the violation of ordinances, and for licenses for drays, hacks, barbers, markets, places of amusement, and the like. They were the only proper custodians of prisoners; they apprehended deserters, prevented blockade-running, and extended and preserved levees.

In towns and cities of the occupied areas provost courts were established with jurisdiction over both criminal and civil cases. They did the work of the ordinary police court and of the lower State courts. Each department delineated the jurisdiction of its provost courts. The Department of the Gulf constituted provost courts to decide and pass judgment upon all cases of violation of general or special orders, violations of the Rules and Articles of War, violations of the recognized laws of war, other offenses arising under military jurisdiction where the offender was not in the U.S. military service and where the penalty did not extend to loss of life, and upon all civil crimes against the persons or property of the inhabitants committed by any person not in the military service of the United States where the penalty did not extend to loss of life. The Department of the South created superior provost courts to be held at subdistrict headquarters and circuit provost courts to be held at important points within the subdistricts. Both courts had the power to try all cases between citizens and between citizens and soldiers and all violations of military orders and the laws of the United States that did not come within the jurisdiction of a court-martial, but fines were not to exceed $100 nor imprisonment 2 months. Offenses by citizens requiring severer punishment were to be tried by military commissions. The Department of Mississippi, in organizing its provost courts, limited them to imposing no fine exceeding $1,000 nor any imprisonment for longer than 6 months. Many times there was no clear demarcation between the province of the provost court and the military commission; therefore it was not unusual for the Judge Advocate General to challenge the work of the provost courts.

Because the civil courts in Virginia, within the limits of the Department of Washington, had declined to receive the testimony of Negroes, the Department of Washington established a provost court in Alexandria with exclusive jurisdiction in all cases involving the rights or property of Negroes. Similarly, the Department of South Carolina conferred competence upon its courts to exercise jurisdiction over all cases wherein freemen and other Negroes were directly or indirectly concerned.

SUBORDINATE OFFICES

Office of Civil Affairs. When the five military districts were established in March 1867 as a result of the Reconstruction Acts of March 2 (14 Stat. 428) and of March 23 (15 Stat. 2), the power of the commanding generals of these districts was both civil and military. As set forth in the second act, the commanders were to be responsible for the registration of qualified voters who had taken the oath of allegiance to the United States, for the supervision of the election of delegates to State constitutional conventions, and for the transmittal to the President of certified copies of the constitutions adopted. An act of July 19, 1867 (15 Stat. 14), further defined the powers of the district commanders to include the power to suspend or to remove from office persons occupying positions in the civil government of the State concerned, which gave the commanding generals of the military districts power over the provisional governments established by President Johnson.

The commanders of the military districts established at headquarters a bureau or office of civil affairs ove which they assigned one of their assistant adjutant generals. Thus the civil affairs records were maintained apart fro the military records and include correspondence between the commanding general or his adjutant and the Stat governors, presidents of boards of registers, county sheriffs, civilians, and post and district commanders relating t the registration of voters and to elections and the restoration of State governments.

General Recruiting Service. According to War Department General Order 245 of July 28, 1863, al recruiting for the infantry and artillery was to be under the charge of the Superintendent of the General Recruitin Service, assisted by the regimental recruiting superintendents. By War Department General Order 46 of April 26 1869, the recruiting was to be conducted under four general superintendents—at New York City, Cincinnati, St Louis, and San Francisco—and there were to be four depots for collecting and instructing the recruits. These genera superintendents were to report directly to the Adjutant General and were not under the jurisdiction of th department commanders except for purposes of discipline.

Although the officers detailed on recruiting service at the various posts received their orders directly fro and submitted their reports directly to the Adjutant General or the superintendents of the General Recruitin Service, they had to submit sufficient enlistment information to the department headquarters to permit th department commander to assign recruits to the regiments and companies stationed within the departments.

Organization of U.S. Colored Troops. After the Emancipation Proclamation was issued an effort was mad to enlist Negro troops. The Bureau for Colored Troops was established within the Adjutant General's Office unde Col. Charles Foster in May 1863 "for the record of all matters relating to the organization of colored troops," an the Adjutant General, Lorenzo Thomas, was sent to the Mississippi Valley to organize recruiting in that area. Sever department commanders appointed superintendents to supervise the Organization of U.S. Colored Troops in the departments, including the Department of the Cumberland, the Department of Kentucky, the Department of Missouri, and the Department of North Carolina (which referred to its organization as the Bureau of Colored Troops).

Military Agent. In 1864 Congress authorized the purchase for the United States of products of States declared to be in insurrection. The Secretary of the Treasury designated seven river or ocean ports, including New Orleans, as places of purchase, appointed agents, and prepared regulations under which those products could be purchased. Generals commanding in the areas of these ports were ordered to give safe conduct to persons and products duly authorized by the Treasury agents.

By General Order 80 of December 7, 1864, of the Military Division of West Mississippi, the commander of the Department of the Gulf was to grant permits and safe conduct for supplies. In order to carry out this duty, the department commander was to establish an office for the purpose of granting, and registering, the permits and safe conduct authorized by the order, both for the introduction of products and the exportation of supplies. As a consequence of this order, Col. F. A. Starring, pursuant to Department of the Gulf General Order 173 of December 14, 1864, was appointed military agent of the department to grant and register permits and safe conduct and was ordered to open his office at some convenient place near the office of the purchasing agent.

II. GENERAL DESCRIPTION OF THE RECORDS

This preliminary inventory (in five volumes) describes the 10,000 cubic feet of records in Records of U.S. Army Continental Commands, 1821-1920, Record Group 393. The records are those of the field establishments of the Army in the continental United States, including geographical divisions, departments, and districts; armies, army corps, tactical divisions, and brigades; U.S. Troops, U.S. Forces, defenses, and expeditions; and posts, camps, and stations.

Most of the records were in the custody of the Adjutant General's Office (AGO) until they were transferred to the National Archives. Army regulations required the submission of all records of discontinued commands to the AGO. As the archives of the War Department, the AGO was also the depository for records that are now in other record groups in the National Archives. Because the AGO for many years was responsible for providing information contained in these records, it rearranged the records, compiled finding aids, and rebound many of the volumes—particularly records of the period before, during, and immediately after the Civil War—in an attempt to facilitate the use of the records. The rearranging and rebinding has made it impossible to include in Record Group 393 all of those records initially made or acquired by U.S. Army continental commands during the period 1821 to 1920. Certain records that one might expect to find in this record group but that will be found in others are noted below or in the individual entries of this inventory.

In rearranging and rebinding the records of most continental commands between 1821 and about 1870 (some volumes dated as recently as 1884 were also rebound), the AGO separated the volumes into three types of commands: geographical divisions or departments, army corps, and military (reconstruction) districts. Insofar as was possible, a continuous set of numbers was assigned to the volumes of each geographical division or department and its subcommands, each army corps, and each military district.

It was not always possible, however, to separate completely the volumes of one command from those of similar commands and assign to those volumes one set of numbers. This was because many of the volumes were the product of a succession of commands rather than a single command and subcommands did not always remain subordinate to the same superior command. For example, a continuous series of records covering the period 1862 to 1870 was created or amassed by the following succession of commands:

Feb. 1862-Mar. 1862	Department of Ohio, Nashville (Buell)
Mar. 1862-Sept. 1862	Army of Ohio, Nashville (Buell)
Sept. 1862-Oct. 1862	Army of Ohio, Louisville (Buell)
Oct. 1862-Dec. 1862	Department of the Cumberland and 14th Army Corps (Rosecrans)
Dec. 1862-June 1865	Department of the Cumberland (Rosecrans, Thomas)
June 1865-Aug. 1866	Military Division of the Tennessee (Thomas)
Aug. 1866-Mar. 1867	Department of the Tennessee (Thomas)
Mar. 1867-May 1870	Department of the Cumberland (Thomas, Cooke)

The names in parentheses are the names of the important commanding officers.

Normally records may be attributed to a succession of commands for one of two reasons: the commander and his adjutant used the same set of record books as they moved from one assignment to another, or the name of the command was changed and the same record books were continued under the new name.

Generally, the AGO ascribed a given volume to the division, department, district, army corps, or military (reconstruction) district that had the most records in that volume. Sometimes volumes of records of a single post were consigned to the department bearing the same name as the State in which the post was located. For example, volumes for posts in the State of New Mexico whose records are dated before 1861 or after 1866, the dates of the existence of the Department of New Mexico, were assigned numbers in the Department of New Mexico set of volumes. On the other hand, most records of posts in Georgia and Mississippi were placed in the Department of the South (Late) set of volumes. Records of single districts were usually placed with the volumes of their superior command; thus records for the District of Georgia will be found with those of the 3d Military District. But since district records so frequently were parts of records kept by successions of commands, they usually are found among the records of several different commands.

Having theoretically, but not actually, assigned continuous numbers to the sets of volumes of each command, the AGO then prepared lists—not to each of these sets but to the records of each command regardless of which set of volumes the records were in. Thus the list (referred to by the AGO as an index) for the Department of Alabama does not contain only the numbers assigned to volumes in the Department of Alabama set, but also to those volumes in the Department of the Cumberland set and the Department of the South set that contain records of the Department of Alabama and, theoretically, its subcommands. In like manner the list entitled "Index, Department of the East and Miscellaneous" lists the volumes in the Department of the Gulf set containing records of the Department of New England.

Later the AGO rebound most of these sets of volumes. Usually several old volumes were combined into one new volume. A new number was assigned and the lists were annotated to show the number of the new volume. These AGO lists (indexes) appear as the first three entries in this inventory.

The entries in the inventory describing the records included in these volumes indicate both the old and the new numbers. The new number precedes the slant mark and the old number follows it. Those volumes not rebound and therefore having only an old number show a blank in place of a new number (–/23, for example). An abbreviation has been used with these volume numbers to indicate which set of volumes contains the particular volume(s) referred to in the entry. For example, No. 23/45 DE indicates new volume 23 in the Department of the East set bearing old number 45. Similarly, No. 12/51 20AC indicates new volume 12 in the 20th Army Corps set bearing old volume number 51, and No. 10 1MD indicates new volume 10 in the lst Military District set. Old volumes from one set rebound with new numbers in another set are indicated as in the following example: 3 DNMex/10 DFla, which means that old volume 10 in the Department of Florida set was rebound under new volume

3 in the Department of New Mexico set. The abbreviations, along with the volume numbers and titles of the lists, comprise the appendix. Volumes not numbered are shown in the entries as "n.n."

Book records of the signal officers and most book records of the quartermasters were not received by the AGO until after the above-described numbers had been assigned to the volumes. Those records for the signal officers bearing a number not found in the AGO sets have been added, and the AGO lists have been annotated with the numbers appearing on the signal officer volumes. The records for quartermasters have also been added, but they bear no numbers. In instances where volumes are numbered but the number is not in the AGO lists, either initially or by annotation, the volume number, with an asterisk, is given in the entry.

In addition to the AGO sets of volumes this inventory describes 71 volumes that have been assigned numbers by the National Archives and designated NA 1 through NA 71. These volumes, when received by the National Archives, comprised part of still another set of volumes assigned numbers by the AGO. The other part consisted of volumes to which the AGO had earlier assigned numbers in the Department of the East and the Department of the Missouri sets. After restoring the earlier AGO numbers to the volumes in this part and placing them with the appropriate geographical department, the National Archives assigned numbers to the remaining 71 volumes for the purpose of maintaining a control of these volumes similar to that initiated by the AGO.

Many records made or amassed by the commands are not in Record Group 393 because they were removed from the command records or had never been placed with them. There are many volumes of records of general officers, primarily for the Civil War period, in Records of the Adjutant General's Office, 1780's-1917, Record Group 94. Where applicable, reference is made to those volumes in the generals' series in the entries of this inventory. Most of the volumes entitled "Medical Histories of Posts"; most hospital records for posts, departments, and army corps; and some miscellaneous volumes are also in Record Group 94.

In the War Department Collection of Confederate Records, Record Group 109, are many volumes of records of Federal prisons and records of Union provost marshals relating to prisons and prisoners. Prison records include registers, descriptive lists, prisoner rolls, prison morning reports, prison hospital registers, and lists of prisoners released, transferred, deceased, and buried. There are also letters sent by the commanders of Union prison camps and by the commissary of prisoners and agent for exchange of the Military Division of West Mississippi.

Unbound records, by their nature, are more easily rearranged than bound volumes. Many of the letters received, both registered and unregistered, and reports and lists of the commands in Record Group 393 were rearranged by the AGO, particularly for the period of the Civil War and immediately thereafter.

For each department, geographical division, and army corps the AGO constructed a file that it called a "Two or More Name" file (now in RG 393), containing papers arranged chronologically by month. Included are lists of political prisoners, lists of patients in hospitals, morning reports of provost marshals, certifications of disability, lists of absent officers, reports of medical officers, and lists of rejected recruits. The files also contain registered and unregistered letters and concern both officers and enlisted men, regulars and volunteers. Each document relates to more than one individual; if the names are included in the endorsement on the front of the letter or paper, the names have been underlined in red crayon. Theoretically these individuals were connected with the organization in whose name the AGO constructed the file, but actually these files bear little relationship to the bound records in which many of the letters were registered. For example, there were several different Departments of Ohio and the bound records of each are described in several different sets of succession-of-command records; yet the AGO compiled only one "Two or More Name" file for the Department of Ohio.

A similar "Single Name" file was constructed for each regiment of cavalry, infantry, and artillery of the Regular Army for the Civil War period. These records are in Records of United States Regular Army Mobile Units, 1821-1942 (Record Group 391), relate to the individual officers and enlisted men in each regiment, and include not only letters and other papers of the regiments but also letters and other papers that were once a part of the division and department records of Record Group 393.

Similar files were assembled relating to civilians: a "Single Citizen" file and a "Two or More Citizens" file. They are in Record Group 393 and are similar to those for military personnel.

In Records of the Adjutant General's Office, 1780's-1917, Record Group 94, is a series of "Compiled Military Service Records" prepared by the AGO for both officers and enlisted men of the volunteer regiments during and immediately after the Civil War. Many unbound papers, including registered letters, that one might expect to find in Record Group 393 are found in this series. Also in Record Group 94 are the records, both bound and unbound, of the volunteer regiments. The loose records of these regiments include many that, while relating to volunteers, were those of commands whose records are in Record Group 393.

Several other series of records in Record Group 94 were organized by the AGO from records one would expect to find in Record Group 393. One series relates to prisoners during the Civil War, one concerns appointments made by General Frémont, and another is composed of records submitted to the AGO in the 1870's and 1880's by officers who served in the Civil War, or their families, and who had apparently taken the records home after the war. Many letters, telegrams, and reports were removed from the command records for the purpose of preparing the War Department's 70-volume work entitled The War of the Rebellion; a Compilation of the Official Records of the Union and Confederate Armies (Washington, 1880-1901). Many of the papers that were removed have been refiled with the records of the appropriate command; others have been placed with the appropriate department or division records. But many more were neither interfiled nor placed with the records of the appropriate command and can be found in three different series of records in Record Group 94.

Many unbound records registered in the bound volumes of commands in Record Group 393 can be found in the court-martial case files of Records of the Office of the Judge Advocate General (Army), Record Group 153. Additional registered letters can be found in three series of records in Records of the Provost Marshal General's Bureau (Civil War), Record Group 110: correspondence, reports, and records relating to two or more scouts, guides, spies, and detectives; correspondence and other records relating to telegraph employees; and correspondence and other records relating to individual scouts, guides, spies, and detectives.

Many unbound records of Union provost marshals can be found in the War Department Collection of Confederate Records, Record Group 109, in the "Union Provost Marshal Civilians File." This file consists of two series: a "Single Name" file and a "Two or More Name" file composed of provost marshal correspondence, provost court papers, orders, passes, paroles, oaths of allegiance, transportation permits, and claims for compensation for property used or destroyed by military forces. The National Archives has microfilmed these two series and designated them microfilm publications M345 and M416.

Other related record groups include Records of United States Army Commands, 1784-1821, Record Group 98; Records of the Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands, Record Group 105; Records of the Office of the Secretary of War, Record Group 107; Records of the Headquarters of the Army, Record Group 108; Records of the Office of the Surgeon General (Army), Record Group 112; Records of United States Army Coast Artillery Districts and Defenses, 1901-42, Record Group 392; Records of United States Army Continental Commands, 1920-42, Record Group 394; Records of United States Army Overseas Operations and Commands, 1898-1942, Record Group 395; and Records of the Adjutant General's Office, 1917- , Record Group 407.

In this inventory, where possible, the descriptions of unbound records follow the descriptions of bound registers themselves. However, some unbound records bear little or no relationship to the registers and other volumes. It should be noted that after the registers of letters received were received by the AGO from the various Civil War commands, the AGO prepared and inserted supplemental registers into the records of field commands with little regard to the problem of succession of commands. Where there is no correlation between the bound and unbound records, entries have been grouped by "bound records" and "unbound records," and the reader should be prepared for the lack of correlation. This is especially true of entries describing records of the army corps because the bound volumes follow succession of commands while the unbound letters were arranged by the AGO according to army corps headquarters, and subdivisions thereof, without regard to succession of commands.

For a series composed of records of several separate commands in succession and that are found in several separate department or division sets established by the AGO, there are several different entries. Each entry indicates the break between one AGO set of volumes and another. For example, the series of letters sent by the Department of the Cumberland and the Division and Department of the Tennessee are described in three successive entries as follows:

Letters sent. Nov. 1862-June 1865. 6 vols. (Nos. 4, 7-9, 11, and 12 DC). 1 ft.
Letters sent. June 1865-Dec. 1867. 3 vols. (Nos. 33, 34, and 46 DT). 7 in.

The breaks between the AGO sets do not correspond with the actual dates of change in the succession of command, but this method gives some indication of the dates covered in each AGO set. Although the example given is for series of letters sent, the same procedure has been followed in all entries.

The footage for the records in each series is stated in linear feet or inches. Where no linear footage (or number of volumes) appears in an entry, that entry is not a separate series and the records will be found in series described elsewhere in the inventory. Such entries merely indicate in which volumes the records can be found. Assigning entry numbers to nonseparate series has been done only where the series is composed of volumes that can be identified by number in the AGO lists.

A few series are unnumbered because the records described aie part of another series, called a main series. Reference to the main series is made in the unnumbered series.

The principal references used as authority for the structure of the U.S. Army continental commands during the period covered by these records were Frederick H. Dyer, A Compendium of the War of the Rebellion (3 vols.; New York, 1959), and Raphael P. Thian, comp., Notes Illustrating the Military Geography of the United States. . . 1813-80 (Washington, 1881). In the few instances where the records did not agree with Dyer or Thian, the compilers have used, with little further research, the dates or titles given in the records. Useful as a general reference was Russell F. Weigley, History of the United States Army (New York, 1967).

III. GENERAL DESCRIPTION OF VOLUME II

In this volume the descriptions of the records of certain polyonymous successions of commands for the period 1861 to 1870 are identified only by a number because such successions of command are too long to be identified in any other way. For example, no distinct title can be given to the following succession:

May 1861 – July 1861	2d Brigade, Ohio Volunteers, Army of Ohio (Cox)
July 1861 – Aug. 1861	District of Kanawha, Army of Occupation of West Virginia, Department of the Ohio (Cox)
Aug. 1861 – Oct. 1861	Kanawha Brigade, Army of Occupation of West Virginia (Cox)
Oct. 1861 – Dec. 1861	Kanawha Brigade, Department of Western Virginia (Cox)
Dec. 1861 – Mar. 1862	District of the Kanawha, Department of Western Virginia (Cox)
Mar. 1862 – Aug. 1862	District of the Kanawha, Mountain Department (Cox)
Aug. 1862 – Sept. 1862	Kanawha Division, 9th Army Corps (Cox)

Sept. 1862 – Oct. 1862	9th Army Corps (Cox)
Oct. 1862 – Mar. 1863	District of Western Virginia, Department of the Ohio (Cox)
Mar. 1863 – Apr. 1863	District of Western Virginia, Middle Department (Cox)
Apr. 1863 – Dec. 1863	District of Ohio, Department of the Ohio (Cox)

As in volume I, there appears in the inventory, before the title of the series describing the records, each succession of command under the control number, the dates of the command, and the names of the principal commanders. The records of subcommands (e.g., brigades) are described in the same place.

Since the records described in this volume are primarily those of tactical units, the index is arranged to show each command on the department, army, and army corps level in such a manner as to reveal the internal organization of these three types of commands. Insofar as possible, the districts, divisions, brigades, reserves, U.S.C.T., corps, commands, U.S. Forces, detachments, defenses, expeditions, and a few special military installations for the war years are indexed under the superior command to reflect, as closely as possible, the organization of that command. No attempt has been made to show all military installations under the superior commands.

Since it is assumed that not all users of this inventory will know, for example, that the District of Corinth was the same as the 2d Division of the 16th Army Corps or that the U.S. Forces North End Folly Island were part of the 10th Army Corps until April 1864, all districts, defenses, U.S. Forces, expeditions, special commands, and the few special military installations indexed under superior commands are also cross-indexed under type of command (districts, defenses, etc.). This has also been done because of uncertainty as to the exact organization of many commands, particularly for the early years of the Civil War.

In compiling the index, Frederick H. Dyer, A Compendium of the War of the Rebellion (3 vols.; New York, 1959), has been useful, together with a series of records in Record Group 94, compiled by the Adjutant General's Office, entitled "Historical and Statistical Records of the Principal Military Commands in the Union and Confederate Armies." The preparation of an accurate index of this type, the only practical type, is almost impossible. To aid the National Archives in the preparation of a more accurate index in a future edition of this inventory, readers are invited to submit to the National Archives any documentary evidence of inaccuracy.

Although volume II is entitled "Polyonymous Successions of Commands, 1861-70," there are 20 exceptions (Nos. 1-20). There were nine army corps whose headquarters records were never completely part of a succession of commands—Hancock's 1st, 2d, 3d, 5th, 9th, 10th, 16th, 23d, and the 25th. In order to include the records of all army corps in volume II of this inventory, Nos. 1-9, respectively, have been assigned to records of the nine corps when they did not appear in polyonymous successions of commands. In addition, some tactical units of army corps, and of Civil War armies and departments, whose headquarters records are described in volume I, were not parts of a succession of command. As in the instance of the army corps headquarters, these units have been included in order to place the descriptions of most such units in one part of the inventory. The corps, armies, or departments whose units have been added were assigned Nos. 10-20.

These exceptions should not be a burden to the reader, since the index will refer him to the appropriate control number for all commands and subordinate units, whether they are merely included for convenience (Nos. 1-20) or whether they are part of a succession of command (Nos. 21-491). For many, frequent referral to the index will be found most helpful.

During the Civil War 25 Regular Army corps were subordinate to different armies at one time or other. Seven temporary corps were formed: Hancock's 1st Corps, three corps under the Army of Ohio, and three corps under the Army of Virginia.

For a brief history of the Army command structure and a general description of the records the reader is referred to the introduction to volume I of this inventory.

In general, volume I of the inventory describes the records of numbered departments, named geographical departments and divisions, and the five military (reconstruction) districts. Volume III will describe the records of the geographical districts. Volume IV will describe the records of the military installations whose records cannot be separated from those of the departments, divisions, and districts, and volume V will describe the records of the military installations whose records can be separated from the records described in volumes I-IV.

INDEX

This index contains 14 types of commands listed in alphabetical order, except those for departments, armies, and army corps. Indexing is arranged to show the internal organization of each of these three types of commands. Whenever possible, the districts, divisions, brigades, reserves, U.S.C.T., corps, commands, U.S. Forces, detachments, defenses, expeditions, and a few special military installations for the Civil War years are indexed under the superior command to reflect the organization of that command. Some cross-indexing is supplied because of uncertainty about the exact organization of many commands, particularly for the early years of the Civil War. The boldface numbers are control numbers; page numbers follow.
